

Running a half-yearly strategy review

September 2026

A practical guide to the half-year review: what each unit prepares, how the session runs, and how decisions are followed through.

Summary

- A half-yearly review works when figures are in before the meeting, the meeting is spent on decisions, and every decision has an owner and a date.
- This guide sets out a four-week rhythm the Strategy Office can run with every unit.

The four-week rhythm

WEEK	WHAT HAPPENS	WHO
1	Units report every figure and note on the platform	Unit custodians
2	The Strategy Office checks completeness and flags off-track rows	Strategy Office
3	Review sessions: one hour per company, decisions only	CEOs, unit heads
4	Decisions logged as actions with owners and dates	Strategy Office

Rules that keep it honest

- No figure is discussed that is not on the platform.
- Every red figure comes with a note before the session, not during it.
- The deck is drawn from the platform; nobody builds slides by hand.
- A decision without an owner and a date is not a decision.

What it means for Meridian

- The H2 2026 cycle can run to this rhythm with the tools already in place: the reporting cycle, the Focus board and the review deck.
- The Internal Tracker holds the decisions from each session, so the next review opens on what was done.
